HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK

PREPARED BY AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR ANIMAL HEALTH

A SERIOUS MENACE ACROSS THE BORDER

Every livestock owner in the United States should appoint himself a "committee of one" to help guard against today's threat of foot-and-mouth disease from across the Mexican border.

Cattle killed in foot and mouth disease outbreak.

As long as a single infected cow remains in Mexico, herds in this country will never be secure. Many thousands of Mexican cattle now carry the infection, and the campaign to check the outbreak in that country is far from being completed.

In spite of the quarantine of the outbreak area and the United States' ban on livestock imports from Mexico, there is danger that the plague may somehow leap across the border.

Migratory birds or other wildlife may carry the virus, according to veterinary authorities. It may be carried on the clothing of farm workers or other persons. Animals or animal products may get through, in spite of all precautions.

Because of these risks, American farmers are urged to be suspicious when symptoms appear involving the mouth or feet of farm animals, and to call the nearest veterinarian or livestock health official at once.

At least four other diseases cause symptoms so closely resembling those of foot-an-mouth disease that only a veterinarian can tell them apart. Instant action in identifying the true cause of trouble is the greatest safeguard, because foot-and-mouth disease spreads like wildfire. It has been known to jump from one herd to 20 herds in two days.

Foot-and-mouth disease, even when it is not fatal, destroys the economic value of an animal. It affects not only cattle but also swine, sheep and goats.

Slight Danger Noted In DDT Dusted Corn

Tests of Silage Show Minute Trace in Milk

Farmers are being told to use DDT dust or spray for control of European corn borer. This raises a question. Can corn dusted or sprayed with DDT be used for silage for beef or dairy cattle without danger to the animals, or to people who use the milk?

Tests in Wisconsin showed there was a trace of DDT in the milk of dairy cows fed silage made from canning factory pea vines which had been dusted with DDT. The amount of DDT was so minute, however, that it was not considered dangerous.

On corn, an application of 30 pounds of dust (containing 5 per cent DDT) per acre might amount to two ounces of DDT per ton of silage; that is, if all the dust stayed on the corn, which is extremely unlikely. Even that much would result in only about a gram of DDT daily in the ration of a cow or steer.

DDT toxicity studies at a private research farm indicate no danger to animals from considerably larger amounts. Even so, if any farmer fears a trace of DDT in milk from silage made from sprayed or dusted corn, he can feed the silage to steers, heifers or dry cows.

Millions of my nieces and nephews know that these bonds are among the most essential assets to hold for their future because savings bonds are safe and profitable.
